

Pressure Point

I know what you're thinking. It's unconventional to want a man nine years older than you. It's inconvenient to crush on your dearest friend's older brother. It's silly to pine after a man for six years. It's cliché to lust after a celebrity. It's pathetic to fall in love with a man who barely knows you exist. I know what you're thinking because I've thought it all, too. And yet that hasn't stopped me from wanting Blake Campbell. Charming, gorgeous, brilliant, kind, selfless. Blake is everything I've ever wanted, but he doesn't see me that way. In fact, he hardly noticed me until one night. Traumatic events brought us together for the first time, but then he tossed me aside. I know it's irrational, but I wanted him up until the moment he left me lying there alone. When his eyes finally open and he finds out I've left, will it be too late?
